

MAY BUILD THREE GREAT BATTLESHIPS

Navy Department Will Ask Congress for Money to Excel England's Latest.

ALL YARDS TO GET A CHANCE

Plan is to Construct One Vessel at Government Plant and Private Companies Will Bid on Others—Original Plans for "Skeerd-o-Nothing" Upset.

Reliable reports from Washington say that the navy department will ask Congress at its next session for funds to build at least two and probably three mighty battleships, designed to equal, if not excel, in speed, endurance and fighting strength Great Britain's latest war-dogs, the famous Dreadnought and the Indefatigable, which were reported to be armored cruisers, but which are battleships of an even more formidable type than the Dreadnought.

Secretary of the Navy Charles J. Bonaparte has directed the naval board of construction to investigate all of these vessels, particularly the last three, and it is understood that designs for similar vessels will be prepared by the construction board and submitted to Congress with a request for sufficient funds to construct them.

It is understood that it was the original intention of the department to have the huge 20,000 ton "Skeerd-o-Nothing," plans for which have been completed, constructed at the New York navy yard but the new developments will mean that private ship-building firms will be called upon to submit bids on all vessels authorized, except one to be built by the government. This means that the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company will be able to submit bids on at least two mammoth battleships and it stands an excellent chance to land the contract for at least one of them.

The investigation by the naval board of the three new English battleships probably will upset the orig-

Final plans of the department on the 20,000 tons battleship. The three new English battleships are of less displacement, greater speed and the same armament as the Dreadnought and report has it that the navy department will endeavor to design three battleships of less tonnage, but greater speed and the same armament of the proposed 20,000 ton ship. This will be the problem with which the naval board will have to contend in deciding the new ships, and if it is successful the plans will be submitted to Congress when the request for the necessary funds to construct them is made.
